Speech before the Republican Association, January 31, 1861, -

BY NATHANIEL HATCH, ESQ., OF WASHINGTON WHAT IS THE ISSUE BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND SOME OF THE SLAVE STATES?

To the entire misapprehension of this splen-did organization of our republican, national, representative Government may be attributed all of the present political excitement and re bellion of the citizens of many of the States. But as reckless politicians have poisoned the minds of many of the people of those States, in what way can they be restored to a just sense of their rights and duty, is now the question. All know that the United States is a Govern-ment of limited and clearly-defined powers, emment of limited and clearly-defined powers, em-anating from and sustained by the people of towns, cities, and States. All powers not specially granted by the States are reserved to the people of the several States. What, then, is meant by going out of the Union? Do not the States continue to enjoy their own State Governments—pass their own laws, and in all things manage their own affairs in their own way? The United States affairs in their own way? The United States have, in pursuance of a constitutional provision, established post offices within the boundaries of their cities and towns, at great expense. Do the States object to that? The people of the several States, for their own security, signed this joint Federal bond, by which each one and all guarantied that they would, in the name of the United States, maintain to each a republicant form of grownment, and defined each of can form of government, and defend each of them against "invasion or domestic violence." For the further security of these constitutional For the further security of these constitutional guaranties to the States, it was specially pro-vided that this Federal bond or Constitution should not be even amended without the assent of three-fourths of the States, and the Senators and Representatives, and the members of the several State Legislatures, and all the executive and judicial officers of the United States and the several States, shall be bound by oath to support this Constitution. This additional ob-ligation of oath disposes of all the authority of sovereignty of the new States has been con ferred by an act of Congress, and that act provides that the laws of the United tates shall have full force and effect throughout the State

2. "This Constitution, and the laws of the "United States which shall be made in pur-"suance thereof, and all treaties made, or "which shall be made, under the authority of "the United States, shall be the supreme law of "the land; and the judges in every State shall be bound thereby, anything in the Constitu"tion or laws of any State to the contrary not"withstanding."

The Constitution expressly provides for the admission of States, and not for secession How is it possible for any to contend that one or more States can destroy or abrogate the con tract, which requires three-fourths of all to amend? Such a proposition carries with it its entire refutation. It is a new invention for re bellion and revolution. The leaders of the slave States in the present political excitement are laboring to keep out of sight of the people the great fact that the United States takes away no rights or privileges of the States, and that they all enjoy the honor and protection of this splendid Union, and that it was by this joint power we gained our independence from Great Britain, and have been known and proclaimed to all the civilized world as a nation, that we have treaties with forty-five foreign Powers as a nation, we have purchased all our public domain as a nation. All the charters for the admission of all the States since the Constitution was formed have been granted by the United States. The boundaries of the whole continent belonging to the Government are known to the world as the United States. Every law of the Union is declared to "be enacted by the Senate and House of Representations of the Union is the Union is declared to be the state of the Union is declared to the senate and House of Representations of the Union is the Constant of the Union is th tives of the United States, in Congress assem The sovereignties of the acquired were granted conditionally by the United States.

to remain a part of the Uni'ed States in the support of the Union. The 3d clause of the 10th section of the 1st article of the Constitution provides that "No State shall, without the consent of Congress, lay any duty of tomage, keep troops or ships of war, in time of peace, enter into any agree-ment or compact with another State, or with a foreign Power, or engage in war, unless actual ly invaded, or in such imminent tagger as will not admit of delay." The Constitution pro-tects and honors all of the States, and leaves all of them in the full enjoyment of all their bwn laws adapted to the support and protec-tion of their own institutions, unimpaired and uninfluenced by the United States. Every in-dividual, every slave State, is in the free and perfect exercise of every political and pecuniary ight granted and projected by such State There is no oppression, no injustice, no griev ance. Why, then, permit partisans, for political objects, to make false issues with the Gov ernment of the United States without the shadow of an excuse? The slave States, so far as re gards their domestic relations, are neither in nor out of the Union. The Government of the United States is not a domestic institution, but a national union of power. It is a corporation for great national and beneficent purposes, and, like all other corporations, it is not designed to interfere with any of the domestic relations of the States, or with the individuals of States. If the United States does not interfere with or oppress any State, why should a State seek to invade and coerce the United States? Why should the people of South Carolina, while they have their own independent State Government, find it necessary to commit treason and perjury against the United States? They are at liberty to select any or all branches of industry and enterprise which they may think proper, free from restraint by the United States. It has been settled that the slave States can have their institution, by their own State Government, with perfect success, inside of this Union. There is no form of government devised which insures more perfectly the property in the slave, and the respect of the owner, than this. The Constitution has placed this institution and the The Constitution may be entirely to force the power of party.

The Constitution may be misrepresented and accused of weakness and defects by politicians, but it has a variety, vitality, and power, just where it should be, and is invaluable to the Sational Republican.

South, which is more interested in its preservation than the North. The slave States are sectional by climate and productions. They have a cohesive political power which has com-manded the United States Government for sixty years, of which the free States might well com-plain, but that the variety of their employments ingage too much of their time for them to attend to politics, and they submit to the results of an election with patience, however much it may be against their interest. The United States Government is supported The United States Government is supported by duties on imports, and not on exports; the South therefore escapes most of the expenses of the Government, as their people do not consume or wear many foreign goods. The slave States have a large share of offices in the General Government. Of employees in the Departments, only 421 are from the free States, and 806 are from the slave States. All the great elements of enterprise and civiliza-tion are left to the people of the several States. The people cannot secede from their several towns and States, or from the exciting influences of the present age of progress, which is the great emancipator and agitator of the black the great emancipator and agready of the boars and white races. From this progress there is no escape, in or out of the Union.

No book should be published at the expense of the Government for distribution, without containing a copy of the Constitution of the United States; let all the presses of the constitution of the United States; let all the presses of the constitution of the United States; let all the presses of the constitution of the United States; let all the presses of the constitution of the United States. try print this Constitution, so that all the peo-ple may read and understand the value of this Government, and we may hope to see the white man emancipated, and no longer a slave to the devices of the politician and the demagogue, who may get up a secession war whenever they please. An attempt has been made to find an excuse for the present revolution in the find an excuse for the present revolution in the act of Massachusetts. She never asked to se-cede from the Union. The embargo and the business; while thus impoverished and undefended by the United States, she asked merely the privilege of appointing her own officers, and defending her own territory; she was al-ways loyal to the Union. But even the suspicion of such a charge has proved a most mor-tifying source of regret to Massachusetts. The South think strange that all the people of the free States do not advocate the slave institution. They forget that they have repudiated it by emancipation, so that we now find ninetyone thousand free negroes in the little State of Maryland, and only the Northern cotton gin ented its extinction, but the Republicans will not interfere with slavery in any way.
